PREAMBLE

We, who concur in the incorporation of the Omnia Sub Sole Foundation,

Considering that war, famine, insecurity and intolerance continue to determine the existence of millions of human beings, and that no generation has to date succeeded in overcoming them;

Considering that the world our children are to inherit is decided by the works of the present, and that it cannot continue to be built upon force, greed and forgetfulness;

Recognising that the human being is capable of the best and of the worst, and that the institutions that surround him determine in large measure which of those two capacities prevails;

Convinced that to know the place we inhabit, the origin of all that exists and the causes of our ills constitutes the first step, and the most arduous, towards a dignified common life;

Persuaded that the pursuit of truth, even where only a part of it is attained, constitutes a duty of every human being and of every generation, and determined that every step, however modest, shall count and be recorded;

Resolved to erect a solid work, of brick and stone, of archive and of study, that shall outlive those who found it and serve those who succeed them;

Do hereby establish this Foundation as a cloister of study and research in the service of humanity, without owners, without an imposed creed and without party allegiance, and call upon all who share this purpose to join it with their time, their knowledge or their means.

SUMMARY

NATURE

A philanthropic non-profit foundation, in the course of incorporation, domiciled in Cartagena de Indias.

OBJECT

To erect a cloister of brick and stone, furnished with a library, an archive and a museum, devoted to the examination of the physical world — the form of the Earth and the supposed gravity field, the Moon, the Sun and water — to the study of the origin of the world and to the analysis of the current world order.

SEAT

At present, an office in Bocagrande, by prior appointment. At a later stage, a property of its own in Santa Rosa de Lima, some fifty-five minutes by road from Bocagrande, where the cloister will be erected.

CALL FOR FOUNDING MEMBERS

Ten persons who sign a letter of commitment for the incorporation of the Foundation. Participation is subject to no payment and confers no ownership: whoever concurs, founds.

PURPOSE AND PERMANENCE

The institutions that endure are not born of a subscription or of a campaign. They are born of a small number of persons who, in uncertain times, resolve to erect something destined to outlive them. Thus were built the libraries, the observatories and the cloisters that still stand today: with stone and brick, with patience and with a few names entered in the founding deed.

Omnia Sub Sole offers neither financial return nor ownership. It offers permanence and purpose: a solid building of brick and stone conceived to endure for centuries, an archive that safeguards the work of the members of the cloister, and an entity without owners, whose assets may be neither alienated nor divided. Whoever concurs at this stage acquires nothing: they found an institution, and bequeath to their own a place made to endure.

Premises of its own

A permanent seat for a labour at present dispersed: a library, an archive and study rooms with a fixed address.

Entry in the deed

The first signatories are recorded as founding members in the deed of incorporation, a public and permanent document.

Building, not running costs

Contributions are applied to foundations, walls and vaults. Every section built is recorded with the name of whoever made it possible.

Publication and preservation

Studies are published under their author's name, submitted to internal review and kept in the Foundation's archive.

A voice in governance

One member of the cloister, one vote, irrespective of the sum contributed. Decision-making power cannot be purchased.

Use of the premises

Access to the library, to the working days and to the field programmes. At a later stage, residence for those who have completed a year of collaboration.

Express exclusions

- No financial return and no share in the assets of the entity.
- No title to the property, the building or the archive.
- No place of residence in exchange for money.
- No right of veto over what is studied or published.
- Outside the Republic of Colombia, contributions confer no entitlement to tax relief.

The Foundation has not been incorporated and receives no financial contributions. Those who wish to concur may register and, should they see fit, sign a letter of commitment, without any payment.

NATURE AND AIMS

Omnia Sub Sole is a non-profit foundation in the course of incorporation. Its object is to erect and maintain, in the environs of Cartagena de Indias, a cloister of study and research, furnished with an archive and a library and conceived to endure.

Its name, ‘everything under the sun’, expresses the scope of its work: nothing that exists lies outside its field of study. Its motto, Individui pro veritate, expresses its method: free individuals in the service of truth.

The Foundation has no owners. Whatever it receives or builds — the property, the building and the archive — shall form part of the assets of the entity, which may not be distributed among individuals. In the event of dissolution, the assets shall be transferred to another non-profit entity of like purposes.

OF STUDY AND INQUIRY

The work of the Foundation is organised into three complementary fields, in a deliberate order: first, the physical world we inhabit; secondly, its origin; and, upon that basis, the world order in which human beings live together, with the declared purpose that the next generation should receive a better world than the one received. Each field relies on methods and evidence appropriate to the nature of its subject.

I. Of the physical world

Geodesy. Examination of the form and dimensions of the Earth, together with the supposed gravity field, by observation and measurement. This shall encompass a thorough study of gravitational theory, its foundations, its predictions and the experimental evidence by which it may be tested. The Foundation proceeds from one principle: no model is to be accepted without independent verification; and it considers that the prevailing model presents discrepancies with direct observation that merit rigorous and independent examination. The study draws upon historical cartography, ancient sources, observation of the sky at its successive layers of altitude and of the weather, and field measurement; and it likewise considers the models that contemporary science does not accept.

Selenology. Study of the physical properties, surface, origin and evolution of the Moon, with particular examination of its apparent position in the heavens and its distance from the Earth.

Solar physics. Examination of the structure, activity and radiation of the Sun, its apparent position in the heavens and its distance from the Earth, together with its relations to the terrestrial environment. Together with selenology, it comprises the measurement of time and the calendars derived from the cycles of the Sun and the Moon.

Fluid mechanics. Study of water at rest and in motion, with examination of pressure, currents, waves and circulation.

Findings are published with their data and their sources, whatever their conclusion.

II. Of the origin of the world

Cosmogony and natural theology. The study of the origin of the world and of its Creator through the creation accounts of the various cultures, ancient texts and philosophy. It constitutes a field of research, not a confession of faith: the Foundation is not a church and requires adherence to no creed.

III. Of the current world order

The contemporary world order shall be a subject of inquiry: its institutions, its forms of government and the interests bearing upon the lives of peoples. Such analysis shall rest upon documented facts, corroborated sources and verifiable comparisons. It also comprises an analysis of the human condition and of the causes of the great ills of history — war, famine, insecurity, racism and intolerance — together with the comparative study of the models of social organisation. The aim is not confined to diagnosis: it comprises the improvement of the present model and the proposal of a more just and more lasting model of common life, directed at the betterment of the human being and of the world that generations to come are to receive.

- Of public and private bodies: their origins, governance, funding and decision-making, together with ownership where applicable.
- Of geopolitics, conflict, religion and borders, insofar as they bear upon peace and coexistence.
- Of the economy, the concentration of wealth and the distribution of resources, and their relations to hunger and inequality.
- Of living conditions, cooperation and duties towards others, with examination of the means by which they may be improved.

PROGRAMMES ON THE CURRENT WORLD ORDER

The third field, the current world order, is pursued through four programmes, ordered from the structural to the human. Each programme examines documented facts, publishes its findings in study papers and refrains from asserting whatever cannot be attested. The Foundation undertakes them with one conviction: the state of the world demands more than diagnoses; it demands solid foundations upon which to build.

I. World order and institutions

An examination of the structures that have governed the world since 1945: the United Nations system and its agencies; the economic institutions — the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, the World Trade Organization, the Bank for International Settlements and the central banks; alliances and blocs; and non-state power. In respect of each institution five questions are answered, always in the same order: who created it and to what end, who decides within it, who funds it, what it has achieved and where it has failed, and what reforms have been proposed.

Modules: an atlas of the institutions of the world; a register of public functions exercised by private bodies; the banking system and the creation of money; corruption documented through judgments and audit reports.

II. War, peace and borders

A study of the causes of war and of the conditions that have sustained periods of peace, through the comparative examination of conflicts and of the treaties that brought them to an end. It comprises the contemporary regime of passports and visas, generalised after the First World War, and the arguments, on either side, concerning the freedom of movement of persons.

Modules: causes of war; conditions of peace; borders, passports and visas; migration and its documented effects.

III. Inequality and distribution

An examination of inequality among persons and among continents: debt, the trade in raw materials, famine and access to water. The programme studies which forms of redistribution and of aid have verifiably improved the lives of the poorest, which have failed, and for what reasons.

Modules: redistribution and aid; balance among continents; sovereign debt; famine, water and food security.

IV. Human nature and society

A study of the conditions that incline the human being towards cruelty and greed or towards generosity and mutual aid, in the light of history, of the available evidence and of the moral traditions. It comprises racism and intolerance, with Cartagena de Indias and San Basilio de Palenque as cases of study; the communities that have endured for centuries and the rules that sustained them; and the ethics of wealth in the various traditions.

Modules: conditions of cruelty and of kindness; racism and intolerance; enduring communities; the ethics of wealth and of the duty to give.

Rules of the programmes

- Documented facts. Only what is attested by founding charters, budgets, minutes, judgments and audit reports is asserted. On undocumented intentions, the cloister makes no pronouncement.
- Legal precision. Under investigation, charged and convicted are not equivalent terms. No name is published without prior legal review.
- Description before proposal. Each programme first publishes what occurred and its causes; proposals are formulated thereafter and expressly distinguished from the facts.
- Non-partisan character. The cloister studies models and publishes evidence; it promotes no political programme.

STANDARDS OF RESEARCH

The Foundation understands research as a rigorous, unhurried and documented labour, subject to the following standards:

Primary sources. Study proceeds from historical maps, ancient texts and original documents or faithful copies thereof, and from direct observation and measurement.

Citation of sources. Every study records its sources and its data, so that any reader may verify them.

Internal review. Prior to publication, each study is reviewed by other members of the cloister.

Preservation. A copy of every published study is deposited in the Foundation's archive.

Dissemination. Findings are made known through study papers, working days and lectures.

FIELD PROGRAMMES

The examination of the physical world is supported by four field programmes, conducted with the Foundation's own means.

High-altitude aerial exploration

Balloons of the Foundation's own design, built to ascend through the successive layers of the atmosphere and to remain aloft, fitted with meteorological instruments — temperature, pressure, humidity and wind at each layer of altitude — measuring systems, high-definition video and real-time transmission, with the recording of unidentified aerial phenomena.

Long-distance observation and measurement

Long-distance photography and laser measurement over land and over large bodies of water.

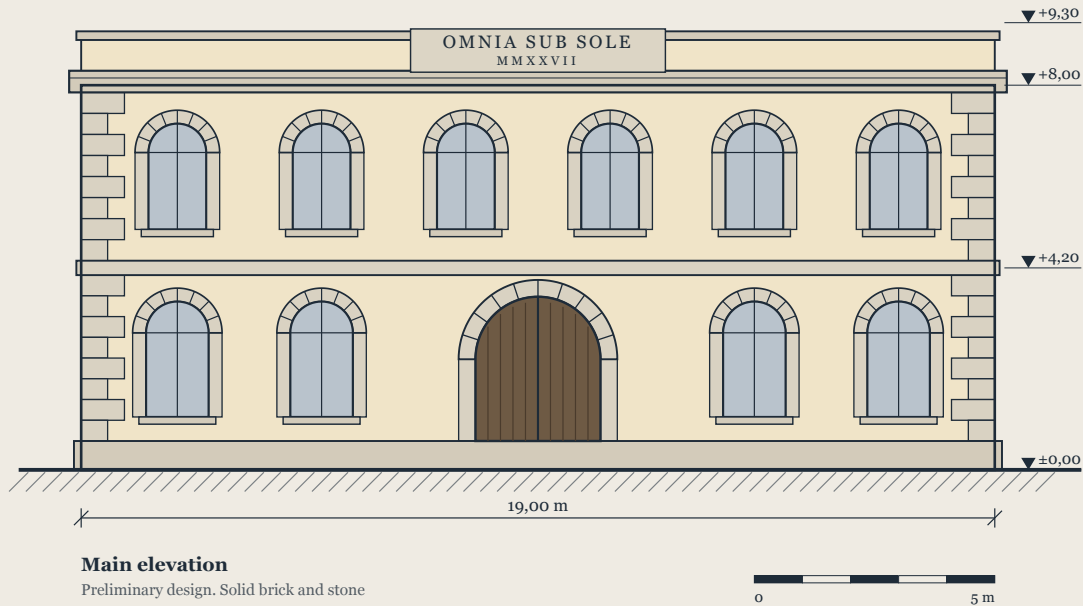

Sun, Moon and the measurement of time

A systematic record of the position of the Sun and of the Moon, of shadows, phases and eclipses, taken with the Foundation's own instruments, together with the study of the calendars and of the measurement of time derived from those cycles.

Cartography

Charts drawn from aerial observation, field measurement and historical cartography.

PREMISES AND BUILDING

The premises shall be erected in phases on a plot of 1,012 m² at El Rancho I, a gated country estate developed by San Martín Group in Santa Rosa de Lima, some fifty-five minutes by road from Bocagrande, in Cartagena de Indias. The founder shall convey the plot to the Foundation by deed of donation once the founding members have been gathered and the budget for the first phase of construction has been secured. The estate's regulations require a setback of 1.5 m from the boundaries and limit height to two storeys plus a roof terrace; the preliminary design complies with both conditions. The building shall consist of two storeys arranged around a central courtyard.

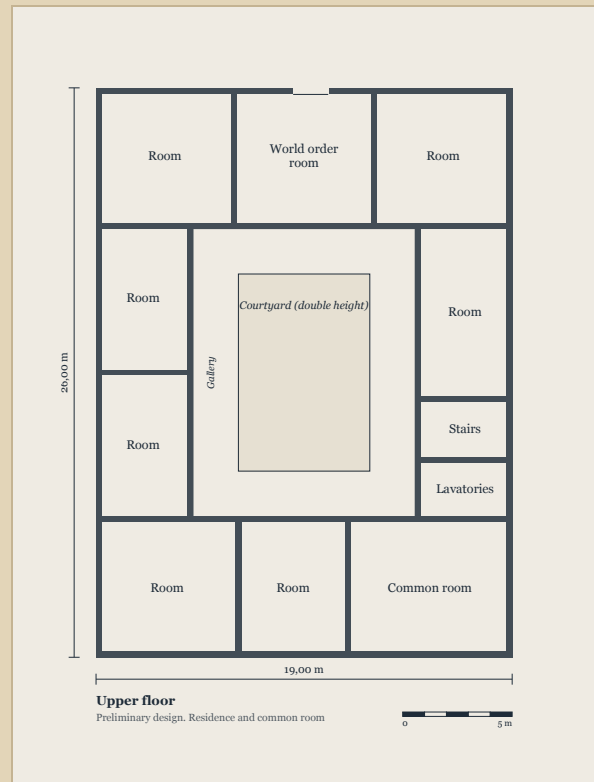

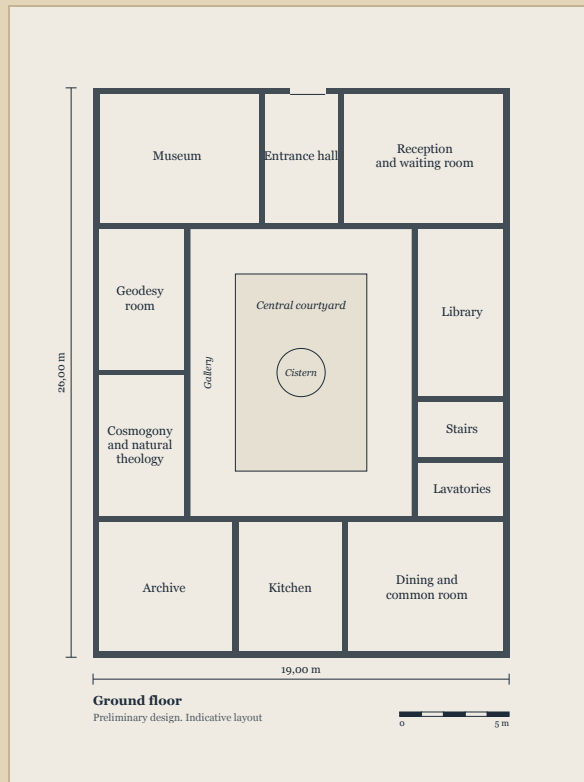

Solid construction. Walls of solid fired brick with lime mortar and tile-vaulted brick roofs, in accordance with the building tradition of Cartagena de Indias; plinths, quoins, jambs, cornice and commemorative plaque in stone.

Rooms. A geodesy room, a cosmogony and natural theology room, a world order room, a museum, the archive, the library and a seven-room residence for resident members.

Residence. Seven rooms on the upper floor: one family unit per room and a maximum of fourteen persons, including the residents' children, who may reside with them.

Museum. A permanent exhibition room of historical cartography, instruments and pieces from the archive, open to the public by guided visit.

Self-sufficiency. A kitchen garden, solar power on the roof terrace and an independent water supply.

Floor plans of the preliminary design: some 440 m² built per floor, plus a central courtyard of 54 m². The definitive layout and orientation shall be settled in the architectural project, subject to the technical studies, the building licence and the regulations of the estate.

The estate: El Rancho I

A licensed country subdivision by San Martín Group in the municipality of Santa Rosa de Lima (Bolívar), some fifty-five minutes by road from Bocagrande, in Cartagena de Indias. According to the developer, the estate covers 96 hectares with 660 serviced lots of 500 to 3,700 m², and delivery is scheduled for 2027.

- Services. Guarded gatehouse, water mains, electricity and compacted-gravel roads.
- Common areas. A main social area with a kiosk, barbecue area, sports ground and playground; a second social area with lakes, fishing and piers.
- Nature. Broad green areas crossed by a footpath for walking and sport.
- Rules that bear on the cloister. A 1.5 m setback from boundaries and a limit of two storeys plus a roof terrace; the preliminary design complies with both.

Figures published by the developer in September 2026. Location on the map. The lot number is disclosed to registered applicants.

FORMS OF PARTICIPATION

Neither collaboration nor membership of the cloister, which confers the right to speak and to vote, is subject to any fee. Contributions are always voluntary and in no case confer a greater share in decisions.

Study

Research in primary sources, translation and the drafting of studies.

Construction

Stonemasonry, bricklaying, carpentry and the other building trades.

Archive and library

The cataloguing and preservation of maps, books and documents.

Administration

Accounting, administrative procedures and regulatory compliance.

Patronage

Financial contributions, once the Foundation has been incorporated.

Documentation

The photographic and audiovisual record of the project.

Engineering and electronics

The design of balloons, measuring systems and data transmission.

Cartography

Surveying, aerial photography and the drawing of charts.

MEANS OF SUPPORT

The Foundation is incorporated with a minimum of ten signatories, who are entered as founding members in the deed. The group of founding members closes upon the execution of the deed; participation, by contrast, remains permanently open, and the cloister is sustained by new admissions and by sources of income conceived to endure as long as the building.

New members of the cloister

Admission remains open and consists of an application, a period of collaboration and the approval of the Council. Membership entails no fee: members sustain the entity through their work and, should they so wish, through voluntary contributions.

Donors

Occasional or periodic contributions from those who are not members. A certificate is issued for every contribution.

Named work

Each phase yields elements that may bear, by way of symbolic recognition, the name of whoever funds them: an ashlar, a window or a room.

Study papers

Subscription to the publications of the cloister, the most modest source and the most stable.

Museum and guided visits

The entity's own income from the opening of the premises, distinct from donations.

Bequests

The Foundation accepts bequests, applied in their entirety to the building and to its preservation.

Permanence reserve

A fixed proportion of every unrestricted contribution is set aside in a reserve that is not applied to current expenditure. That reserve funds the preservation of the building and of the archive in the years in which no construction or campaign is in progress.

Financial contributions shall be received only once the Foundation has been incorporated and a bank account opened in its name.

STATE OF THE INCORPORATION

The plot. The founder shall convey the El Rancho I plot to the Foundation by deed of donation once the founding members have been gathered and the budget for the first phase of construction has been secured.

Founding members. The entity shall be incorporated once at least ten persons have signed the letter of commitment. Those who appear at the execution of the deed, up to a maximum of twenty, shall have the status of founding members.

After the deed. Founding-member status closes upon the execution of the deed. The admission of members of the cloister and the receipt of donations and collaborations of every kind remain open without limit.

Signatories committed. One of ten: the founder.

CURRENT CONDITIONS

- The premises offer no accommodation. The residence shall be opened at a later stage, with seven rooms and a maximum of fourteen persons, children included; whoever has completed a year of collaboration and provides for their own upkeep may be admitted as a resident.
- No financial contributions are received until the Foundation has been incorporated and holds a bank account of its own.
- The Foundation shall be incorporated once at least ten persons have signed a letter of commitment. Ten is the minimum required for its incorporation, not a limit upon the number of participants.
- Contributions are not refundable. They form part of the assets of the Foundation.

TIMETABLE

- 1 Presentation of the project and opening of the registration period. September 2026.
- 2 Monthly meetings in Cartagena de Indias. From October 2026. They include visits to the property.
- 3 Signing of letters of commitment. A minimum of ten persons. First half of 2027.
- 4 Incorporation of the Foundation. Execution of the deed, entry in the register of non-profit entities, allocation of the tax identification number (NIT) and opening of the bank account. 2027.
- 5 Commencement of the first phase of construction. Once the founding members have been gathered, the budget for the first phase secured and the donation of the plot formalised.

CLARIFICATIONS

Non-denominational and non-partisan character. Cosmogony and natural theology constitute a field of study. The Foundation requires adherence to no creed and takes no part in party politics.

Ownership. The property, the building and the archive shall become the property of the Foundation, and its assets may not be distributed among individuals.

Contributions. Neither collaboration nor membership of the cloister is subject to any fee. All contributions are voluntary and shall be received exclusively in the Foundation's account, once incorporated.

Number of founding members. Ten is the minimum required for the incorporation of the entity. The admission of new members and the receipt of donations remain open.

Residence. Resident status shall be opened at a later stage, subject to a year of collaboration, a period of probation, an approved plan of work and provision for one's own upkeep. Seven rooms: one family unit per room and a maximum of fourteen persons, including the residents' children, who may reside with them. The room is attached to the admitted resident; children, upon coming of age, shall apply for their own through the ordinary channel.

Personal data. Personal data are processed solely for the purpose of coordinating participation, in accordance with Colombian Law 1581 of 2012.

Location of the property. El Rancho I, a country estate in Santa Rosa de Lima, some fifty-five minutes by road from Bocagrande, in Cartagena de Indias. The lot number is disclosed to registered applicants.

CONTACT AND VISITS

The founder

Francisco Salvatierra Sánchez is promoting the incorporation of the Foundation. He shall convey the El Rancho I plot by deed of donation once the founding members have been gathered and the budget for the first phase of construction has been secured; to this contribution are added the financial resources, labour and personal dedication that he has devoted to the undertaking since its inception. He receives visitors by appointment at the office in Bocagrande, Cartagena de Indias.

Visits are received by prior appointment only, which may be requested by email.

- 1 Request registration by email.
 - 2 Attend a monthly meeting, in person or remotely, with a visit to the property.
 - 3 Sign, should you see fit, a letter of commitment, without any payment.
